	Methodologies
Methodologies	Description
Directed discussion	Given a relevant and controversial topic from the texts we are reading, students are encouraged to focus on one particular aspect and provide their own interpretations based on the information found in the text.
	The purpose is for the students to take sides, and defend their own ideas in front of an audience critically and logically with the help of the text itself or the bibliography chosen by them.
Guest lecture /	At the beginning of each particular chapter, instructor would provide students with a general socio-historic overview of keynote speech	American society to better contextualize the text we are reading.
	The aim is to point at major themes dealt with, brief comparative analysis of characters, as well as a brief but clear comment on narrative techniques used by a particular author.
	A power point presentation is usually used, as well as interviews with writers, or documentaries which reflect on the specific literary movement and / or writer.
	This lecture-type class is nevertheless dialogic, and students are encouraged to participate with comments and/or questions.
	The lecturer also provokes the students with questions or "brainstorming-type" warming up before focusing on topic chosen.
Short answer	This is a "quizz-type" exercise.
questions
	Students are given relevant information from texts analyzed in class, briefly identify them, and explain reasons why they thinks they are relevant for the particular text.
	Example: From the name of a protagonist, an object, a particular metaphor, or a catchy line.
	The purpose of this assignement is for students to go from the particular to the general, and provide their own interpretations.
Document analysis	Close-reading and critical analysis of texts.
Long answer / essay	The purpose of this assignment is for the students to write a comparative essay.
questions	They are given different options, and can choose among topics which focus on form and structure or on specific themes.
	At this stage, students should be able to support their ideas with evidence (quotes) from the texts.
	No memorization is needed. Essay should be well organized (introd., body, and conclusion), and provide a personal and in-depth comparison.
	Students are allowed to use their required texts for this in-class test.

<style type="text/css">P { margin-bottom: 0cm; }</style>This 6 credit course is conceived as a continuation of Literatura Norteamericana I. It continues, therefore, the review of the literature of the United States from its colonial beginnings to the present century. In this case, the historical review focuses on the post-Civil war period and the modernist writers, with a sprinkling of post-WWII texts. This is the period that sees the establishment of a canonical tradition of American literature. Time limitations restrict the number and the length of the works to be treated (hence, in part, the concentration on short texts and poetry) and economic as well as literary considerations (number, quality, and representativeness of the selections) determine the choice of the Norton anthology as the source of most of the texts analyzed in class. If you rely on photocopies, a course pack will be provided before the beginning of the course and ideally before your summer vacation.</patk_t;palign="LEFT"> The texts will be read, roughly, in their chronological order, with attention being paid to their historical contexts and their reflection of and on the literary and cultural interests of their period. We will spend most of the course dealing with the production of a modern and "modernist" American literature, focusing especially on the connexion between the notion of modernity and American literature. The creation of a self-consciously " American " and modern literature begins in the post-Civil War period and so we begin with the diverse modes of "realist" writing of the turn of the century and their attempts to represent the often chaotic plurality of modern American reality.Class-work will concentrate almost exclusively on close analysis of the texts themselves. This course is not only a review of some of the most important works and writers of the period from the late nineteenth century down to the post-1945 period; it is also predominantly an exploration of how these texts work, what writing strategies they initiate, what interpretative responses they elicit and what cultural work they carry out in their portrayal of an American reality. As we shall see, this is especially pertinent to American literature given its constant concern with how " America " itself should be read and written.  Given this approach, students must read the texts before their analysis in class so that adequate comprehension may be more or less taken for granted and fruitful discussion may be possible. This is merely stating the obvious but it is especially necessary for a course in which your rhythm of reading will have to be regular and sustained for you to get the most out of it. Your are also expected to read the Norton anthology's short period and author introductions as helpful background to your reading of the primary texts.
