General description	The course focuses on the relationships between sex, gender, and sexuality. We review elements of current debates about these concepts in academic and professional settings, and explore their implications for activism and social action. We will develop research and/or intervention proposals in various socio-educational contexts, based on the interests and experiences of the students, constructing these within a theoretical framework that allows their contextualization and justification.
Contingency plan	1. Modifications to the contents No change 2. Methodologies *Teaching methodologies that are maintained Debate forums on the Moodle platform *Teaching methodologies that are modified Class meetings will be suspended, and the students who are registered for the presencial modality will be changed to online 3. Mechanisms for personalized attention to students Teaching will be adapted to the technological needs of presencial students in the event that they have to change modality. 4. Modifications in the evaluation No change *Evaluation observations: 5. Modifications to the bibliography or webgraphy No change

Methodologies
Methodologies	Description
Guest lecture / keynote speech	(Lecture sessions) Oral presentations by the instructor which establish and relate scientific and disciplinary knowledge essential for the understanding of the subject. The presentation will be complemented by the use of pertinent resources (textual and/or audiovisual).
Directed discussion	Sessions will be allocated to the introduction of questions addressed to students to encourage reflective dialogue. This approach is based on the conception of learning as a dialogical process, an act of (re) creation, relating and consolidating reflection and action. The debate will facilitate and promote the sharing and contrasting of informed opinions. With this methodology we aim to: identify difficulties in understanding; inspire divergent thinking; promote a connection with lived experiences; and develop awareness of and critically reconstruct new ways of thinking, feeling and acting. The directed discussion can be developed in person (in the classroom sessions) or virtual (forums).
Document analysis	Methodological technique that involves the use of audiovisual and/or bibliographic documents (segments of documentary reports or films, news, web pages, scientific articles, legislative texts, etc.) relevant to the subject matter, accompanied by activities specifically designed for their analysis.
Supervised projects	The final project for the course will consist of an action/research proposal. The justification and the design of the proposal will draw upon the material addressed in the lecture sessions and directed discussions.

Personalized attention
Methodologies	Description
Directed discussion	For students with official part time status and those who receive academic dispensation and exemption from attendance, we will design a specific tutoring schedule at the beginning of the course that is compatible with these requirements.

Assessment comments

The same tasks will be evaluated for the first and second opportunities.

The participation grade cannot be changed for the second opportunity. This grade, which reflects the student's course participation, will be saved from the first opportunity.

For students who are registered in the on-line modality, discussion forums on the Moodle platform will replace participation in classroom debates. These as well as the class preparation tasks must be completed by the assigned deadline to receive full credit in the participation grade.
