General description	People interact among themselves and with the rest of nature in a unique way among all species. This is due to our exceptional, although imperfect, talent for cooperation. In this course we analyze the capacity and limits of humankind to organize and solve social and environmental problems.

Personalized attention
Methodologies	Description
Guest lecture / keynote speech Directed discussion Online discussion	Part-time and attendance-exempt students can choose whether to be graded in the same way as regular students or only with three essays on topics assigned by the teacher and written debates about them in Moodle. In the essays, students must defend ideas that are compatible with the scientific evidence as presented in the keynote speeches and the summaries of them that the teacher will upload to Moodle. Alternatively, students can argue why they disagree with the keynote speeches and their summaries.

Assessment comments

Each student can submit, singly or in a group, three essays on topics assigned by the teacher for online discussion in Moodle and present them orally for discussion. In the essays, students must defend ideas that are compatible with the scientific evidence as presented in the lectures and the summaries of them that the teacher will upload to Moodle. Alternatively, students can argue why they disagree with the lectures and their summaries. Each essay is worth up to 30 points.

Students who do not submit any essay will get a "No show" grade.

Students get 2 points by participating in each small group session in the assigned schedule or instead by presenting an essay like those described in the first paragraph.

For the second and the ahead-of-schedule opportunity, each student can submit, singly or in a group, three essays, each worth 30 points. The points obtained in the first opportunity are not conserved for the second and the ahead-of-schedule opportunity.

Students can get the "Honors" grade in any opportunity, but preferentially on the first.

Part-time and attendance-exempt students can choose whether to be graded in the same way as regular students or only with three essays as above and written debates about them in Moodle.
