General description	This course is focused on an idea: Europe had a common legal past. In the Middle Ages, the so-called "Ius Commune" was studied in all the universities and it was used by the jurists from around the old continent. This common law transcended national and legal boundaries. For this reason, the history of law in Europe has the same vocabulary, that was created by the "Ius Commune". This law consisted of Roman, Canon and Feudal law. As the rest, Spain has been part of this European reality. Our juridical past is determined by Europe because Spain has not been an island on the continent. But also, the different local institutions (a kingdom, a principality, a feudal lordship, a monastery) had their own law, with their particularities, the so-called "Ius Proprium" (particular law). The principal aim of this course will be the knowledge of the common legislation of Europe and the singularities of the "Ius Proprium". The addition of the "Ius Commune" to the "Ius Proprium" will show the "system of Ius Commune". Then, it's very important to understand that the big legal categories used in Western Europe had the same origin, the "Ius Commune". Nowadays, if we speak about "property", "obligation", "will", we use the meaning created by "Ius Commune": dominium, obligatio, testamentum.

Assessment comments

An exam will be required at the end of the semester concerning all the contents. The value of this exam will be 50 % of the final mark.

A continuous assessment will be followed throughout the course. In addition to traditional means of assessment such as the exam, students may be asked to:

- Make a presentation either individually or as a group project.
- Compose research papers or other extended written work, including annotated bibliographies.

These works will be valued with the other 50 % of the final mark.

In the assessment corresponding to the second opportunity, which takes place during the month of July, students must follow the same evaluation parameters as in the first opportunity. This second opportunity may be an oral exam.

Students who have officially recognized their part-time enrollment must pass the written exam like other students. About assignments, professors, analyzing each case, will facilitate their delivery by these students.

If any student plagiarizes an assignment, the author will not pass the continuous assessment.
