General description	The Migration and Labor Market subject addresses the main explanatory theories on the labor insertion of the migrant population, within the framework of the different migration systems, deepening the Southern European model and placing special emphasis on the Spanish case. We will analyze the labor trajectories and social mobility of migrants with a gender and intergenerational approach. The classes will provide the necessary methodological tools to analyze, from a qualitative (life stories) point of view, the labor and social mobility trajectories of the migrant population.
